60 HOURS ON CAPSIZED BOAT

TUTTLE'S CREW CLUNG TO THE

RIGGING, SEA WASHED.

So Exhausted When the Segurancas Came

Up That They Could Not Move to Help Themselves—One Steamer Had Passed

Wreck Apparently Without Seeing It.

The Ward Line steamship Segurancas, which arrived here yesterday from Campeche and Havana, brought to port the crew—Capt. George W. Heath and seven men—of the schooner Charles F. Tuttle, that was wrecked off the coast of South Carolina in the hurricane of Sunday and Monday last.

Capt. Heath sailed from Charleston on September 15 with a full cargo and deckload of lumber for New York. The storm came up early the next morning, the wind blowing from north-northeast. By dawn of the 17th it had risen to its hurricane force. The vessel was severely strained by the pitching and her seams opened.

The steam pump was set to work, but the water gained until there was five feet of it in the hold and then the crew was put to work at the hand pumps.

By 9:30 the decks were awash. The deckload was jettisoned. The wind moderated and blew from the southwest. The schooner was headed inshore to make smooth water if possible, but at midnight began to go down by the head. She actually rolled and the crew had to run aft in a hurry when the bow went under. Then the schooner rolled on her beam ends with her port side under water and the crew was compelled to scramble to the starboard mizen rigging.

The position of the men here was perilous in the extreme. The masts lay almost on the water and with every sea the seamen were tossed about like straws. They had a hard time keeping their hold. There was no way of getting lines with which
